

Soundala Art & Sound Display

Soundala is a digital art work that combines kinetic art with sound and light. The core of the display is a colorful mandala from an original fine art work featuring a full spectrum of spiraling lotus petals. Each of the several hundred petals is separately backlit and digitally controlled by an onboard computer.

The work displays a myriad of mesmerizing sequence patterns animating the petals and surrounding radial features. Soundala responds to ambient sound and music which gives it an interactive dimension.

Soundala Art and Sound Display is a stunning addition to any home, presenting a unique high end kinetic artwork. There are a myriad of commercial applications for Soundala ranging from art galleries and nightclubs to hotel lobbies, corporate headquarters, restaurants, discos and convention booths. Due to its calming effect other applications include waiting rooms from banks to airports, alternative medicine practices, yoga studios and meditation rooms.

The Soundala user interface is accomplished with an Apple iPad app connected via a wireless network. There are several associated apps that perform such functions as creating the sequential patterns, displaying combinations of patterns and digitally processing sound and music to create the audio/visual component.
